Phillies Logo Adds New Twist For '84

"We were looking to add a little life to our Phillies script and I feel we've come up with an additional new logo for use this season and in years to come," said Dave Montgomery, Executive Vice President.

When the decision was made to add to the script logo, the project was turned over to Dick Perez, the official artist for the Phillies.

"What we tried to do is incorporate the great tradition of Philadelphia," said Perez. "Consideration was given to the Liberty Bell, William Penn, the Art Museum and other famous sites, but I felt Independence Hall would be the most natural. The name Philadelphia was added and the seams of a baseball form a perfect background."

"It all ties together now—baseball, Phillies and Philadelphia."

The new secondary logo will be worn by the Phillies players on their uniforms this year as was the case with the 100th anniversary logo during the 1983 season. It will also appear on the premiums the team will give away to fans, souvenir sale items, publications, decals, bumper stickers, tickets, outfield fence decorations at the Vet and on the road and many other uses.

"We have been quite pleased with the Phillies script and 'P'. Now we have enhanced the script in a logo which stands up to the most attractive ones in the game," Montgomery added.

Paul Owens: Success at Every Level

By JACK CARNEY,
Phillies Report

Nervous, fidgety, a noticeable loss of sleep evident in his eyes, Paul Owens had all the signs you'd expect to find in a young kid making his first trip to a major league spring training camp.

But this wasn't the 32-year-old Owens reporting for his initial day of work in Clearwater, Fla., on February 7, 1956; no, this was February 17, 1984 and the 60-year-old kid, affectionately known as "the Pope", was making his 29th spring training appearance at a Phillies camp, this time at the Carpenter Complex.

Back in '56 Owens was reporting to then-director of the minor league organization, Gene Martin. Owens' job: manager of the Phils Olean, N.Y. minor league club. The manager of the parent team that spring was a guy named Mayo Smith, who would guide the Phillies to a less-than-spectacular 71-83, fifth-place finish.

Now, however, the Pope was reporting to nobody but himself. In one of the strangest trips imaginable, Owens had made the long transition from lower level minor league manager to this, his "rookie" spring as manager of the Phillies. It was a trip that has taken the Pope from minor league manager to scout to director of the Phillies minor league organization to general manager and now, back to where it all began, the field level.

Extremely successful at every stop he's made on the organizational ladder, Owens is probably happiest right where he is . . . on the field. Yet this is a unique situation for the man, because the team he puts on the field this year is one he has personally built from ground up, from signing some as youthful prospects to obtaining others in one of his many trades.

Truly a team built by the Pope, who better to run than himself? Though he has almost single-handedly turned the organization from its court jester image of the 1950s to its present status of perennial contenders, baseball almost did not even play a part in Owens' life.

Born and raised in the small New York town of Salamanca, located about 60 miles south of Buffalo, Owens was athletically inclined from the start. He participated in football, basketball and baseball on the high school level.

Following his junior year in high school, Owens impressed Dodger scouts at a tryout camp—ironically, the same camp that Danny Ozark was signed by the Dodger organization. Years later Ozark would become one of the most successful managers in Phillies history, working for general manager Paul Owens.

The Owens family was far from wealthy. The Pope's father had quit school at age 13 to begin working for the railroad. In fact, nearly everyone among Salamanca's 9,000 population was associated with the railroad.

Owens mother wanted something better for him, so she cracked down on his study habits to help prepare him for college. Meanwhile, he grew to be 6-feet, 3-inches tall and developed into an excellent basketball player. So good, in fact, he was given a full scholarship by Rider College and proved he deserved it by leading his team in scoring during the first half of his freshman year.

Basketball and college was put on hold shortly thereafter, however, due to World War II. Owens was called to active duty in the Army in March, 1943 and spent the majority of the next three and a-half years carrying a rifle through one European crucible after another.

Owens saw action during D-Day and the Battle of the Bulge and he had more than one narrow escape from death.

"I had about 10 good buddies get killed while I was serving in Europe," recalls Owens. "Thank God, I came out of it without any injuries."

"Sure, I had a lot of close calls. I was a combat engineer, which meant I carried a shovel and a gun at the same time. I got a couple battle stars while I was over there. My company went through France, Belgium and Germany."

"I'll tell you one thing, I was a pretty mature young man when I got out, even though I was only 22."

Youthful by most standards, 22 was ancient by baseball measures then.

"That's just the way it was," Owens says without bitterness. "There were only 16 big league teams then and starting at 22 was kind of late. It was almost unheard of."

Besides, Owens had another major priority in his life. While in Europe he met Marcelle, who would become his wife. They've been married 37 years now, but Owens doesn't forget the horrors Marcelle had to endure as a young woman under Nazi occupation.

"For seven years she was never allowed in the streets after 6 p.m." Owens explained. "The average person in the United States can't even comprehend what it was like for people like Marcelle.

"She never had a long dress to wear. She never had a junior or senior prom to go to. All she was allowed to do was go to school, get home and stay off the streets."

Swept off his feet by the young French beauty, Owens was determined to make a better life for her. The fact that the war probably cost him a chance to play major league baseball doesn't compare with its personal benefits to him.

"She didn't speak a lick of English, and I only spoke a little French," he affectionately recalled. "We hit it off right away and she decided to marry me and come back here. Meeting Marcelle was the greatest thing that happened to me during the war."

Owens' idea of a better life for his new bride meant a return to college to prepare for a teaching career back in Salamanca. He transferred to St. Bonaventure, closer to his hometown, but continued playing basketball and baseball.

The Pope was a power hitter, who caught the eyes of observers from the Olean minor league club during his senior year at St. Bonaventure. Given a tryout, Owens figured it might be a way of making some extra spending money in the summer.

"The day I went for the tryout, it rained like cats and dogs," said Owens. "I got to Olean and the general manager said to me, 'Paul, we're going to be lucky if we even play this game. As long as you're here, why don't you go downtown and get something to eat while we try to get the field ready for the game.'"

When he returned to the park, Owens purchased a $.75 ticket to the game, only to be informed by the general manager that his services were needed — on the playing field.

Owens proceeded to knock out two hits, then added three more the next night. The team signed him to his first professional contract ($175 per month), then sat back and watched while the Pope hit 17 home runs, drove in 101 runs and batted .407 in 111 games.

Owens won every big award the league had to offer that year and during a winter banquet to honor him, he good-naturedly chided the Olean owner.

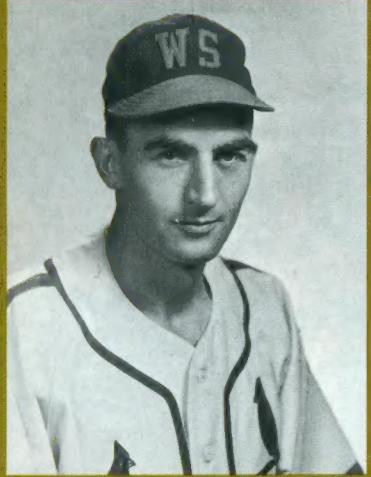

"I told the crowd how I might never make it to the Hall of Fame or the major leagues," said Owens, "but that I was probably the only guy in pro baseball who had to pay to play in his first game. I told the owner the least he could do was pay me back the 75 cents."

A few days later Owens found a check for 75 cents in the mail. He still has the check, only now it's sitting in a frame on the wall of his Veterans Stadium office.

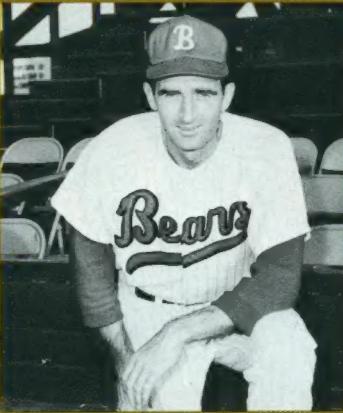

Owens continued teaching while playing and figured his future was in education and coaching. His summers remained packed with baseball, however, and when the Phillies purchased the Olean club in 1955, Owens—who had become player-manager the previous year—was asked to stay aboard.

"They (Phillies) offered me $4,500 and that was $1,500 more than I could make teaching," said Owens. "I figured I didn't have anything to lose and if baseball didn't work out, I'd still get a chance to teach again."

Owens accepted the offer from Martin ("I remember my mother thought I was crazy") and teaching's loss became the Phillies gain. After the '57 season, Owens was shifted to California to manage Bakersfield.

Two years later, Owens was asked to make another change.

"Martin and John Quinn (general manager) wanted to make some changes in scouting. I wasn't really interested in scouting because I liked the field level. But they offered me the entire southwest territory, so I took it."

In 1965 the Phils promoted Owens one step higher, bringing him to Philadelphia to run the minor league organization. The Pope took owner Bob Carpenter's son, Ruly, under his wing and together they remolded the entire structure of the organization.

They studied the team's 20 scouts to find out just how productive each had been. When the facts were finalized, Owens had to make changes.

"Some of those guys were my friends. But this was a business and to be frank, the Phillies had been doing terrible for far too long. Why? 'Cause we weren't signing big league players.

"I hired some new people and then we started signing some guys who made it through the draft. That year alone we got Larry Bowa and Denny Doyle for $500 each."

Owens also saw two other areas which needed changes: (1) the spring training system for the minor leagues and (2) the autumn instructional league.

Spring training for the Phillies was spread throughout Florida. The big league club trained in Clearwater, Fl., the triple A team in Dade City, an hour away and the rest of the minor leaguers three hours away in Leesburg.

"It didn't make sense. I convinced the Carpenters to build a complex in Clearwater where all the minor leaguers could train. We could improve our system and advance the players with better instruction," explained Owens. That was 1967.

Part of the benefit of the complex would fit Owens' second area, adding a team in the Florida Instructional League.

"It cost around $100,000 a year but it was very necessary to implement the development of the kids, in my opinion."

The transformation was obvious. The scouts were signing better players and they had the best facilities for learning. In 1969, the Phillies won the Topps Award for the best minor league program.

"We'd signed guys like Bowa, Greg Luzinski, Bob Boone, Mike Schmidt and many others. We were on our way and we knew it."

Ruly later became the owner and Owens' loyalty and success were honored when the club named him general manager in June of 1972.

Managing? That part of his career seemed to bypass him . . . or did it?

Later in '72 Owens departed his front office seat for the dugout, replacing Frank Lucchesi as field boss, but only on an interim basis.

"I went down there to find out some things about the players. I wanted to find out just who wanted to play and who didn't and the ones who didn't weren't going to stay around."

He found out what he wanted to know and began a trading spree that totally transformed the look of the team. It proved to be a long, slow, patient process, but by 1976 the team reached the National League playoffs. Since then, the Phillies have been the winningest team in the league, both in total victories and in post-season participation.

By helping turn the organization around, Owens could've easily bowed out following 1980, when the team won its first World Championship. But Owens wasn't finished. He remained general manager, insisting that he wanted to leave the team in good shape for years after he retired.

Last summer, following a disappointing 1982 finish and another below-par start, Owens decided to relieve manager Pat Corrales of his duties. The team was in first place, but was only a game over .500 at the time. The clubhouse was a shambles, with players grumbling and Corrales was losing control. Again, Owens took over, only this time to bring home a winner.

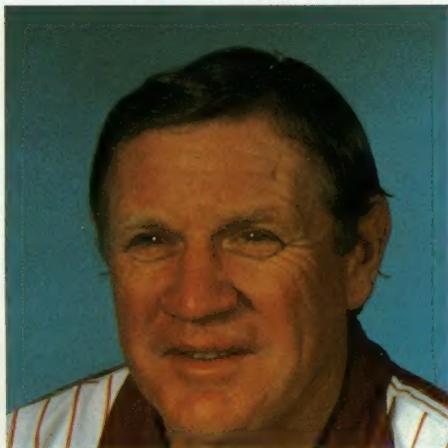

And bring home a winner he did. The Phillies caught fire under Owens in September and made a joke of the pennant race. They then beat the Dodgers to reach the World Series for the second time in four years. And despite losing to the Baltimore Orioles, 4 games to 1, it was a major accomplishment even getting that far.

Few people suspected Owens would remain as manager, but that's exactly what he decided to do. One more year with the team he built. Oh, it'll be a different look, somewhat. Pete Rose, Joe Morgan, Tony Perez and Ron Reed are gone, Juan Samuel and Lenny Matuszek are expected to contribute heavily as rookies.

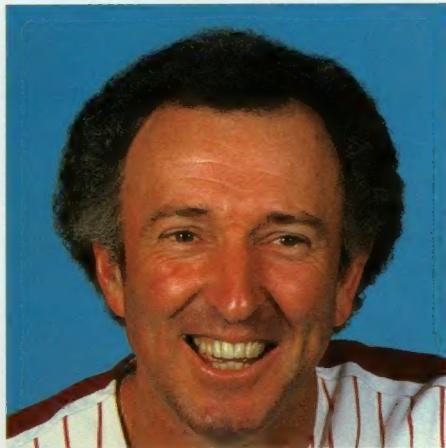

But the most noticeable rookie of them all will be that 60-year-old Paul Owens, because for the first time, he'll be running the field show from the very start of the year.

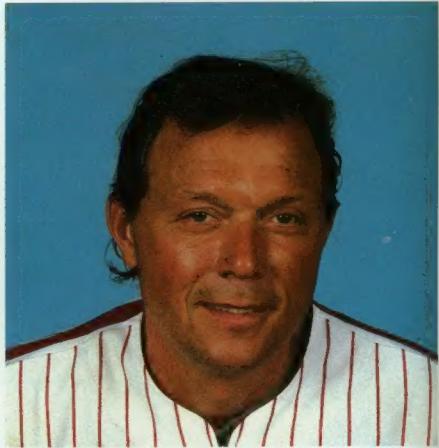

The Coaching Staff

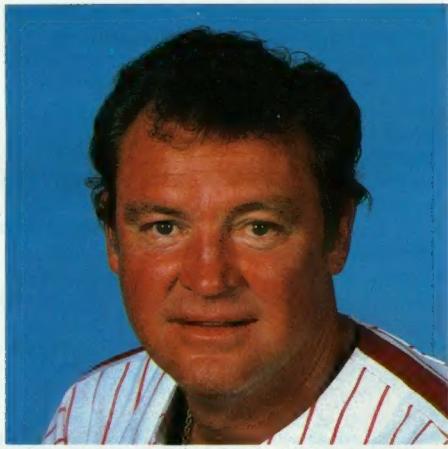

DAVE BRISTOL brings a wealth of baseball experience to the Phillies coaching staff. The former manager of the Reds, Brewers, Braves and Giants is recognized as one of the finest third base coaches in baseball. Now in his third year as a Phillies coach, Bristol is a tireless worker whose tremendous baseball knowledge makes him a valuable member of Paul Owen's coaching staff.

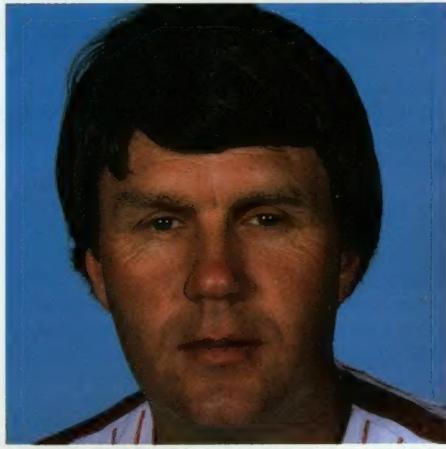

CLAUDE OSTEEN is an outstanding pitching coach. The Phillies won the pennant in 1983 with a subpar offense and a tremendous pitching staff. Osteen, twice a 20-game winner with the Los Angeles Dodgers, is a patient instructor and a fine communicator who is able to get the most out of a pitcher. On a team loaded with potential Hall of Famers last season, no player was more important to the Phillies success than coach Claude Osteen.

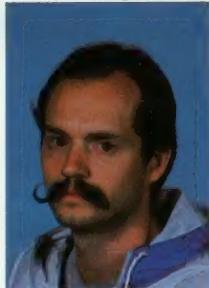

MIKE RYAN now is the Phillies senior coach as he begins his sixth season as bullpen coach. "Irish Mike" is the manager's contact in the bullpen and his job is to have the relief corp ready to go whenever Paul Owen makes the emergency call. A fine defensive catcher, Mike played in the major leagues for 11 years with the Red Sox, Phillies and Pirates before joining the Phillies staff.

DERON JOHNSON is in his third year as hitting instructor and first base coach for the Phillies. The "quiet man" of the Phillies staff, Johnson was originally signed by the New York Yankees and played in the major leagues for 16 years. He drove in 130 runs for the Reds in 1965 and his approach to hitting instruction reflects his basic personality which is very low key. Deron always is available to help a player with his offense.

JOHN FELSKE is the newest member of the Phillies coaching staff. A minor league manager in the Milwaukee Brewers system for six years, Felske joined the Phillies organization in 1982 managing at Reading. Last season he led the Portland Beavers to the Pacific Coast League Championship and a berth in the Triple-A World Series. Felske's job in 1984 will be to acquaint himself with the National League and assist manager Paul Owens in the dugout.

The Phillies in the Community

A year ago, the Phillies launched a new program, Community Relations, to become more involved with charities and organizations in the Delaware Valley.

To borrow the title of Frank Sinatra's popular song, "It Was a Very Good Year" for the first year's effort. The Phillies care and it showed.

Underprivileged children can see Phillies games at no cost, thanks to Mike Schmidt.

Schmidt has set aside 20 tickets for each home game under "Mike's Valuable People."

Wives of the Phillies players this year are raising money for Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS), more commonly known as Lou Gehrig's Disease. Leading the way are Mary Holland and Jasmine Kalas.

Garry Maddox has raised $508,000 for the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic through seven celebrity bowling tournaments.

Seventy elementary classes have taken part in the Phillies Visit The Vet program. These classes spend a morning at the stadium taking tours of the Phillies facilities. Comments have poured into the Community Relations Department from the young students. (See separate story).

This winter, the Phillies Press Caravan raised more than $12,000 for various community efforts in Harrisburg, Lancaster, Wilkes-Barre, Allentown and Trenton.

Organizations may obtain, free of charge, a baseball film for their programs. The Phillies have a very extensive library of films. Newest additions are last year's highlight film, Wheeze Did It and the 1983 World Series. Among the other popular films are the Phillies Centennial Film, a recap of the ballclub's first 100 years, sponsored by Budweiser and A Little Help From Our Friends, a 30-minute instructional film, sponsored by Tastykake.

This season the Phillies are continuing their efforts in educating the public on CPR (Cardio Pulmonary Resuscitation). Phillies players have done public service announcements.

Two-time batting champion Richie Ashburn gives some hitting tips at Dream Week. A total of 106 "athletes" 35 and over, took part in the two weeks of spring training this year. Ashburn was manager of the team.

Philly Phanatic spreads some cheer at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Wilkes-Barre during the three-day Press Caravan. Phillies party also visited patients at the Children's Hospital in Philadelphia and Lancaster General Hospital.

Every stadium supervisor was trained in CPR and a CPR Night has been scheduled to demonstrate the life-saving technique.

The Phillies Usherettes raised $1,000 for Children's Hospital with a series of softball games in 1983 and plan to play ball again in 1984.

The CR department was also involved in Dream Week, a one-week spring training session with former Phillies for "athletes" 35 or over. A total of 104 men and two women took part in this year's session which was expanded to two weeks to accommodate the large demand. Next year's week has been set for Jan. 27-Feb. 3.

Organizations were also able to obtain speakers for their programs throughout the year. Maje McDonnell, a former coach with the Phillies, heads the speaker's bureau.

The involvement goes on and on. Area players were part of a Christmas Party for No Greater Love ... Von Hayes served as sports chairman for the Leukemia Society of America ... Charles Hudson is the spokesman for "65 Roses", which raises money for Cystic Fibrosis.

"I liked the tour we took. We got to see some players in the workout and locker rooms. Some day I hope to play ball at the Vet and see myself on Phanavision."

Doug
Brookline School, Havertown, PA

"The tour was great, but, I didn't like the smells of the cleaning. If your next group comes, don't take them to the lockers while it's being cleaned. I think that the next bunch of children should get to see the Phanatic if he's there."

Annie
Brookline School, Havertown, PA

"I really liked Veteran's Stadium. I thought everything was super. What I like the most of all was sitting in the dugout. And I would love to be in your shoes. Do you ever boss the players around? Why don't you have any girl players?"

Brooke Bickling
St. Mary Magdalen School, Wilm., DE

"I enjoyed meeting some of the ball players in person. I was able to get some pictures with Bob Dernier shaking my hand. The Phillies are one of my favorite teams and I'm glad they have a good stadium."

C.W. Lewis School, Blackwood, NJ

"I liked the movie, the press box and the work out room was great! It was exciting when I saw Von Hayes. It was a very interesting place."

Marc Shuler
C.W. Lewis School, Blackwood, NJ

"I really enjoyed the program. It was really nice. I especially liked when we went into the Phillies locker room because I got to see some of the players. The best part was when I saw Richie Ashburn in person. Thank you for the Tastykakes and milk, the jacket I won and the nice time I had."

Richard Manel, Grade 3
East Greenwich School, Mickleton, NJ

"I really enjoyed my trip to Veteran's Stadium. The parts that I thought were the best was the press box, the dugout, and the Phillies locker room. It was a really great trip. The Tastykakes were delicious."

Kathleen Mizeris, Grade 6
East Greenwich School, Mickleton, NJ

"I liked the Phillies Locker room. I kind of touched or you might say bumped into Mike Smits uniform. (I can't spell his name)"

Tina Avallone
St. Mary Magdalen School, Wilm., DE

"I enjoyed the tour very much. I was amazed to see Bill Giles work out. It felt weird to run on the same field the Phillies played on. Thank you very much."

Kevin Derbyshire
St. Mary Magdalen School, Wilm., DE

Philly Phanatic and Usherette Delores Hall visit a patient at Children's Hospital.

Garry Maddox takes time out from his bowling tournament for a Channel 6 interview. This year's effort raised $46,000 for the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic.

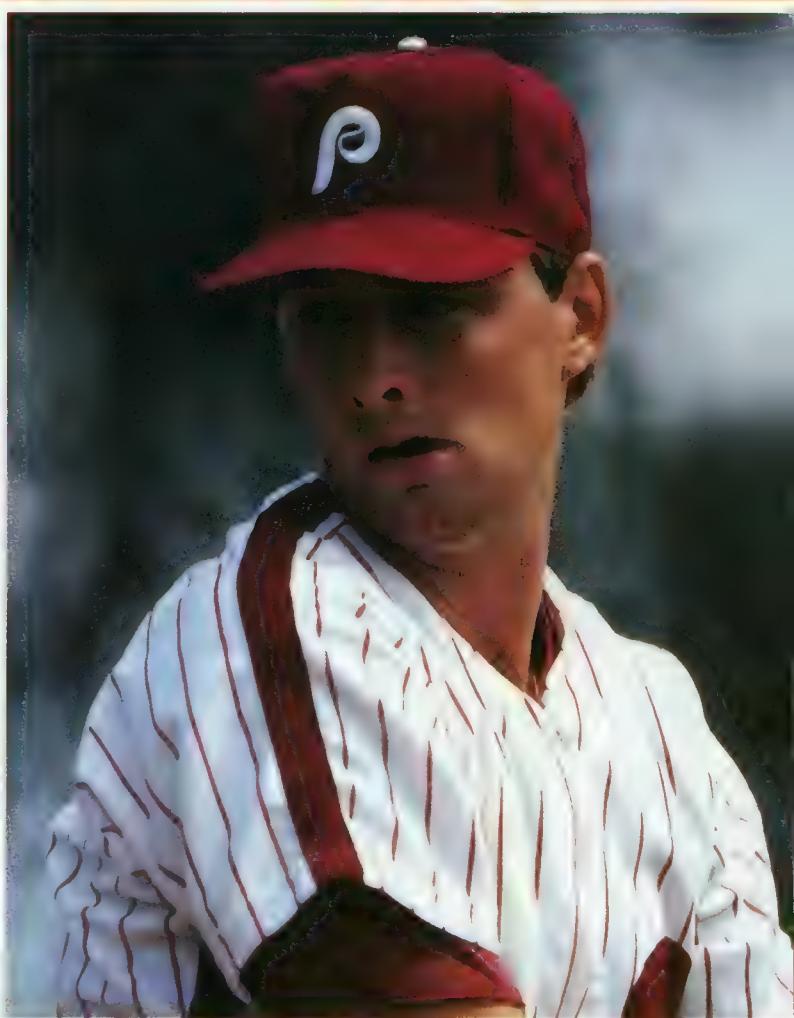

PROSPECTS

Pitching

Tony Gheffi

"Showed excellent fast ball, good curve and slider and shows potentially good change."
—Bill Dancy, Reading Manager

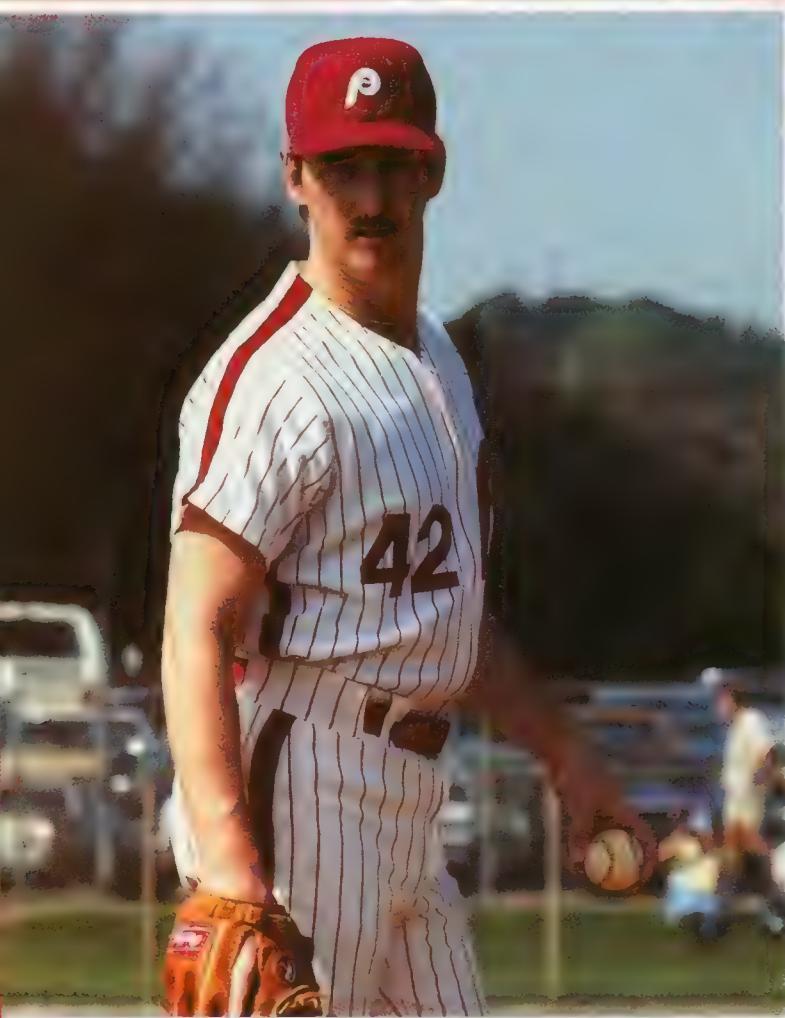

Don Carman

"Had very good velocity and movement on his fast ball and was consistent with it. Could be a very tough relief pitcher."
—Bill Dancy, Reading Manager

PROSPECTS

Pitching

George Riley

"Still has super arm. Got him to throw from stretch and he pitched very well doing that. Shows signs of coming around. Works hard."
—George Culver, Portland pitching coach

Steve Fireovid

"Excellent delivery, the kind which allows him to have good control. Has a good fast ball and sharp-breaking stuff."
—Coach Claude Osteen

PROSPECTS

Catching

Joe Cipolloni

"Has the tools to be a prospect. Needs to use his hands more at bat. Can definitely catch and throw."

—Tony Taylor, Peninsula Manager

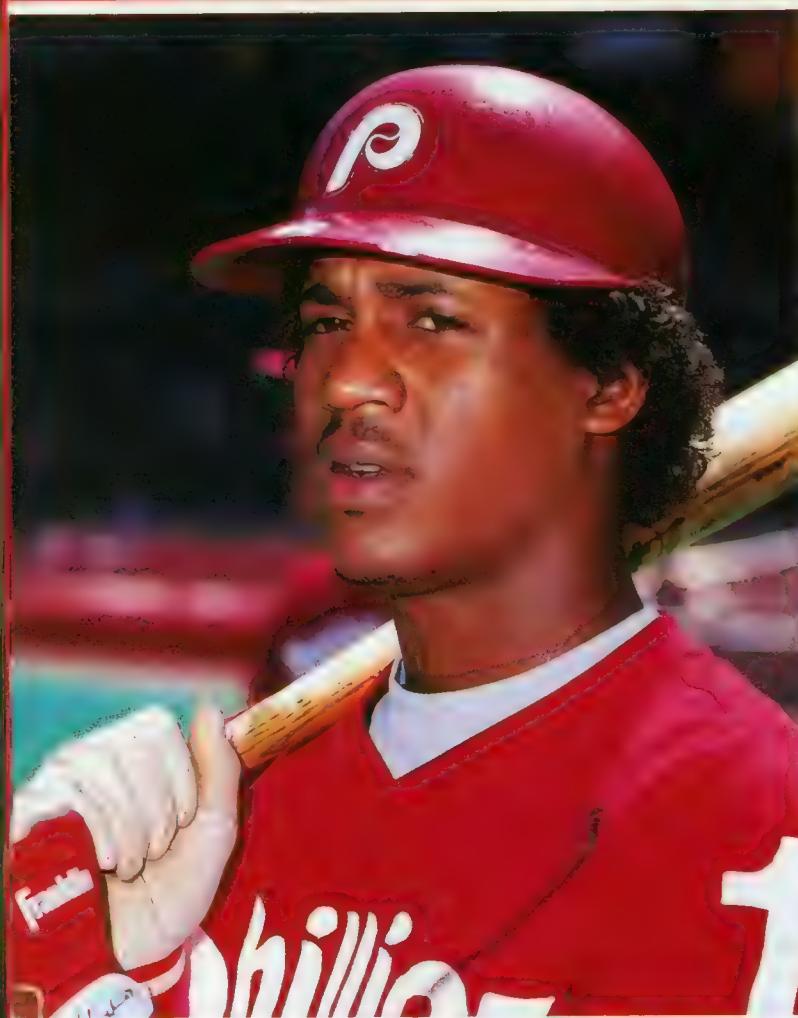

Darren Daulton

"Lefthanded hitter with power who runs very well and has a good eye at the plate. A good defensive catcher."

—Bill Dancy, Reading Manager

infield

Steve Jeltz

"Outstanding defensive player who can play every position."

—John Felske, Portland Manager

Ken Dowell

"Was key to our club. Sure-handed fielder, makes all the plays. He is very aggressive with the bat. Ken opened a lot of eyes around the league."

—Bill Dancy, Reading Manager

PROSPECT

Infield

Francisco Melendez

"Best fielder in the league. Very smooth around the bag. Our best clutch hitter. Is going to get stronger with age and better each year."

—Bill Dancy, Reading Manager

Rick Schu

"Most steady player on the squad all year. Very consistent. Loves to play the game."

—Tony Taylor, Peninsula Manager

Mike Diaz

"He's shown he can hit with power in the minors. Has ability to catch, with strong arm. Has also played first and a little in the outfield."

—Lee Elia, Portland manager

John Russell

"Good hitter with excellent short stroke. Has outstanding power and can hit it out of any part of the park."

—John Felske, Portland Manager

Young Players Hone Their Skills

In the Florida Instructional League it's eight weeks of business for the Phillies and some of their minor leaguers.

Surely this was major league baseball. There were athletes running around a bright green diamond at Carpenter Field located on the northeast side of Clearwater, Florida, where the Phillies annually hold spring training.

The athletes were wearing the familiar blue road uniforms of the Phillies.

But something was different. It was the fall of the year, not springtime. There was no roar of the crowd, just the constant traffic noise of busy Route 19 beyond the right field fence. Matter of fact, baseball scouts outnumbered inquisitive fans on most days.

Checking the uniforms a little closer, something else was different. The names and numbers on the backs of the jerseys weren't familiar. Number 16 read "James," 22 "Cipolloni," 53 "Olson," 87 "Jelks" and all the way up to 94 "Monson."

What was happening each day for a period of nearly eight weeks was the Phillies entry in the Florida Instructional League (FIL). Young prospects from the Phillies system and 10 other major league clubs were getting extra schooling and competition on their way to big league ball parks.

Every August, Jim Baumer, vice president of player development and scouting; Jack Pastore, his assistant, and Larry Rojas, the organization's director of instruction and Latin American scouting, poll the six Phillies minor league managers plus the half-dozen roving instructors for possible candidates for the FIL.

"We go over the list and select anywhere from 25 to 30 players," explains Baumer. "We look at players who might change positions, players who struggled with a certain area, young kids who are prospects but who need more teaching. It gives us a chance to instruct and then have them compete but not under real pressure situations. Some of these kids will come away from the FIL and will be able to jump a classification next year."

Total cost for the FIL was $89,000 for 1983.

Rojas was the coordinator, infield instructor and sets up the daily schedule. Jay Ward, one-time veteran of 15 years in pro ball and last summer's manager at Bend, Ore., was the manager. His staff included Tony Roig (hitting), P.J. Carey (catching), Mel Roberts (outfield) and Ed Watt (pitching). Granny Hamner served as supervisor.

The original schedule calls for a 48-game season. Rain sometimes cuts the number of games. There are no extra inning games, just wins, losses and ties. Statistics are kept by each club. There are no games on Sundays. Single games begin at 1 in the afternoon, double-headers at 11 in the morning.

The players first reported on Sept. 20th. November 12th marked the end of the season.

Posted on the large bulletin board inside the clubhouse are the daily instructions:

9 a.m.—Rojas meets with his staff to review progress, discover new areas of concern and map plans for the day.

9:45—Ward conducts an "orientation period" while Rojas conducts a "court of fines."

9:45—Players report to field #1 for exercises and stretching.

10—Team is broken up into four groups—infidlers, outfielders, pitchers and catchers—for individual and group instruction.

10:30—Groups are brought back together to work on "team work," drills concerning relays, cut-offs, run-downs, etc.

11—Batting practice

12 noon—Lunch break (soup, crackers and Gatorade)

12:30—Infield practice

1—Game time

That's pretty much the daily routine. Road games are all within 30 minutes of Clearwater via the Phillies' own 1964 bus.

Everyone has to watch the game in complete uniform. Those not in the game at the time might be taken aside for individual instruction by one of the staff members. One of the pitchers keeps the chart and stats. Another one serves as the bat boy while two are assigned duties of tracking down foul balls. Best location for this chore is along the left field foul line. That lucky kid can face the game and the sun at the same time, getting a nice tan.

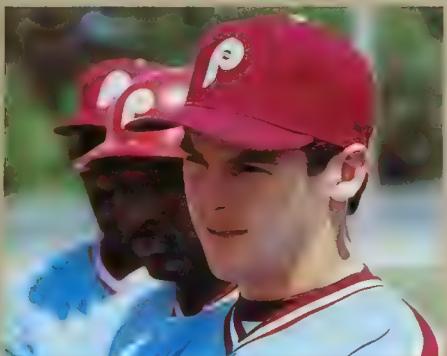

Average age was 21. youngest was a catcher, Steve Monson from Pasadena, Md. He was drafted on the 23d round last June, caught at Helena and celebrated his 18th birthday just before he went to Clearwater in September.

BILLY FERGUSON

GIB SEIBERT

"He has some potential," says Rojas. "He's very young, caught at Helena at age 17. By bringing him down here, we can advance his progress so that in 1984 he can be a numer one catcher for one of the lower classification clubs."

Bud Bartholow, at 24, was the oldest in camp. He's a relief pitcher who began last season at Reading and then moved backward to Peninsula. "He had a tough year, but has definite potential. We brought him here to work on his delivery for one thing and to improve his breaking pitch," Rojas says.

Some of the players are being tried at other positions. Gib Seibert, an outfielder, was moved to shortstop last summer and he was in camp to see if the move can be permanent.

Paul Fryer, a third baseman with an outstanding arm, tried to find out if he could be a pitcher. Shortstops such as Mike Colpitt, Ken Jackson and Gregg Legg played second base.

Most of the players were draft picks in recent years. Others were signed by Phillies scouts after they were by-passed by all clubs in the annual summer draft. Pitchers Dave Bulls, Frankie Griffin, Jim Olson and Mark Tunison; third baseman Chris James and first baseman Greg Jelks all fit into this category. All are rated as excellent prospects, a tribute to the outstanding job turned in by Phillies scouts.

Players receive $23.00 per day. Out of that money, they need to take care of their housing and meals. Most of them pal together to get an apartment and cut costs on their housing.

Rojas is a stickler on rules. It's a matter of teaching discipline. For some, it's learning about life. Time is spent teaching the kids baseball, but Rojas and his staff also teach self-discipline, helping shy kids develop as individuals.

That's part of his "fine" session every morning.

"At the beginning of the season, we set up certain rules, and every day we review those who have broken the rules. There are small fines. At the end of the camp, we have a party for the kids. Some kids are very shy when they come here. They have a chance to get up in front of a group and talk. We do it in a light way not to embarrass anyone."

One of the rules: players must wear a complete uniform when on the field, which means a hat must be worn and not stuffed in the back pocket. There are fines for dirty lockers, not picking up towels off the floor, not depositing dirty uniforms in the proper laundry baskets, failing to bring in chairs the players took to the fields and occasionally a fine for a very bad mental mistake in a game.

Rojas and his staff aren't immune. They are susceptible to adding to the pot.

One particular day, Tony Brown, an outfielder, took the floor to announce he was fining Rojas for not wearing his hat the day before. Rojas challenged Brown: "Yes, but I was talking to a lady, and a man always takes off his hat to a lady. This is something all you young men should learn."

Ward requested a vote among the team. Who was right, Brown or Rojas? Rojas won, and Brown learned a lesson about life at the cost of one dollar.

Some years, a more experienced player might be in camp to work on a specific weakness. Bob Dernier spent some time in the FIL two years ago working on switch-hitting.

A visitor for one week last fall was second baseman Juan Samuel.

"The same time of the year each of the last three summers, his fielding goes south," says Rojas. "He simply gets his feet out of position and everything else goes out of whack. We worked with him for a week on just that before he left for home and winter ball."

Rojas then offered his thoughts on the kids who impressed him the most.

- Billy Ferguson (p): "He tried to finesse people last summer. He wasn't going at the hitter. Now, he's going at the hitters."

- Jim Olson (p): "He needs to stay within himself and not try to overthrow as he did last summer. Showed a lot of improvement. Because of the FIL, he has a chance to skip Peninsula and jump all the way to Reading."

- Joe Cipolloni (c): "Most improved player. Had struggling season last summer but turned it all around. Arm is just shy of outstanding."

- Chris James (3b): "We wanted to move him permanently to third base from the outfield. He had played both and doubled his ability to switch to the infield. He's really come a long-long way there. He DEFINITELY will hit."

- Seibert (ss): "Was an outfielder all his life until last summer. He showed enough promise at short to bring him here and really find out. He's going to be a good prospect at this position. We know he can play the outfield, too. He has a good bat, but not much power."

- Tony Brown (of): "Played very well here two years ago but struggled last summer. He was thinking too much instead of just going up there and letting his talent come forth."

- Kevin Ward (of): "Definitely struggled at Bend. Needed to learn about the professional game. Has shown great improvement in the field and at bat."

The 1983 Season: Consistent Pitching and September's Surge to the Pennant

Connie Mack, the long-time owner/manager of the old Philadelphia Athletics, once said pitching is 75 percent of the game of baseball.

When the Phillies left Clearwater, Fla., last April, the experts said the team would score runs but the pitching was the concern. As the season turned out, it was the consistent pitching which led the Phillies into post-season play for the sixth time in the last eight years.

When the final out was made at Veterans Stadium in Game 5 of the World Series, it was again the pitching which told the story. Unfortunately, this time it was the Baltimore arms which made the Orioles the World Champions and killed any chance of the Phillies winning the Series for the second time in four years.

When post-season honors were handed out, the Phillies pitchers were the ones taking the bow.

John Denny succeeded Steve Carlton as the National League Cy Young Award winner. Al Holland, acquired in a trade with San Francisco to shore up the bullpen, emerged as the league's best. He walked off with the Rolaids Relief Man Award for the senior circuit. His outstanding year led the Phillies to their first ever team bullpen award also given by Rolaids.

Phillies pitchers led the league with the most strikeouts while yielding the fewest walks. The team ERA ranked second only to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The success of the pitching staff was even more amazing when one takes into account that Al Holland, Willie Hernandez, Charles Hudson, Kevin Gross and Larry Andersen — half of the staff — did not pitch at all for the Phillies during the first month of the season.

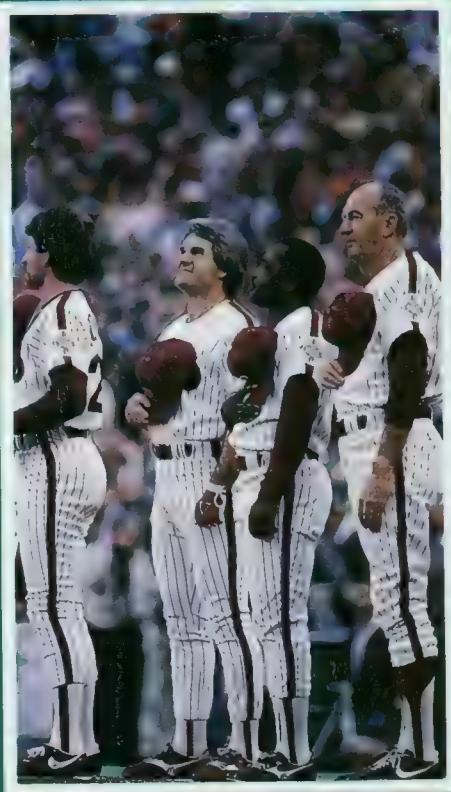

Holland began the year on the disabled list, first pitched on May 1 and picked up his first save 16 days later. Still, he led the league with a club-record 25 saves. Hernandez was picked up in a trade from the Chicago Cubs and became the perfect pitcher to set up Holland for the game-saving situations.

Hudson, Gross and Andersen were all promoted from the Phillies farm team in Portland, Ore.

With an opening day roster averaging 33 years of age, the Phillies were dubbed the "Wheeze Kids". In the end, contrary to what the experts said, "Wheeze Did It." The 90 wins gave the Phillies the best record in the league for the last eight years.

While the offense struggled for consistency and the pitching staff maintained consistency, the race in the Eastern Division appeared to be up for grabs as the last month rolled round.

On the morning of September 1st, Pittsburgh was the leader by one game over the Phillies. Montreal was a game and a-half out and the defending World Champion St. Louis Cardinals trailed by two and a-half.

Paul Owens, who took over for Pat Corrales with the Phillies a game up in July, was using the entire 25-man roster plus the recalls of September.

Owens' club won it with some impressive numbers:

- Greatest finish in club history, 23 wins in the last 31 games.
- Club record 22 wins in September, including a major-league high 11-game winning streak.
- Club record 60-30 record against the eastern division.
- League-leading 50-31 record at home.
- League's best (52-36) record after the All-Star Game.

The Phillies September surge ended the division race on September 28 with a 13-6 pounding of the Cubs in Chicago. It was the Phillies fifth title in the last eight years, another league high.

As the League Championship Series rolled around, the Phillies were expected to finish out of the money, again. After all, the Los Angeles Dodgers rolled over the Phillies during the season, winning 11 of the 12 games between the two clubs.

All the frustration of losing to the Dodgers during the season and the 1977 and 1978 LCS vanished as the Phillies put Los Angeles away, winning three out of four. Gary Matthews (.429, 3 HR, 8 RBI) won the Chevrolet Most Valuable Player Award in the LCS.

The emotional victory sent the Phillies into the World Series against Baltimore.

The Orioles had gotten to the Series by whipping the Chicago White Sox, who won the American League West by a record 20 games. The White Sox led the majors with 800 runs scored, 99 wins.

But, as Connie Mack once said, pitching is the name of the game. Baltimore dropped the first game to the White Sox and then swept three straight. In 37 innings against the Sox, the Orioles staff gave up a scant two earned runs.

Home runs by Joe Morgan and Garry Maddox gave the Phillies a 2-1 win in the first Series game. Baltimore then did the same thing to the Phillies, sweeping four straight thanks to some excellent pitching.

Phillies hitters produced just eight earned runs in 45 WS innings. Thus, Baltimore won seven of nine post-season games thanks to an unbelievable 1.10 ERA.

Greg Luzinski, the former Phil who was the AL's best designated hitter with the White Sox, pointed the finger at the Orioles pitching and with acclaim:

"They shut us down and then shut the Phillies down. Their pitchers are the kinds of guys you see on TV and wonder how can they get you out? But they're good pitchers. They were on the plate with everything. They just didn't make any mistakes."

While the Phillies didn't get to ride down Broad Street again as the World Champions, it still was a very good year. They defied the experts twice.

After all, 24 clubs got to watch the Series on television. It's better to finish second in the Series than not to go at all.

Steve Carlton, Today's King of the Hill

Nearly six thousand pitchers have appeared in major league games over the course of baseball history. Just over five hundred of them have ever pitched in three hundred games. And only sixteen of them have ever recorded three hundred career victories.

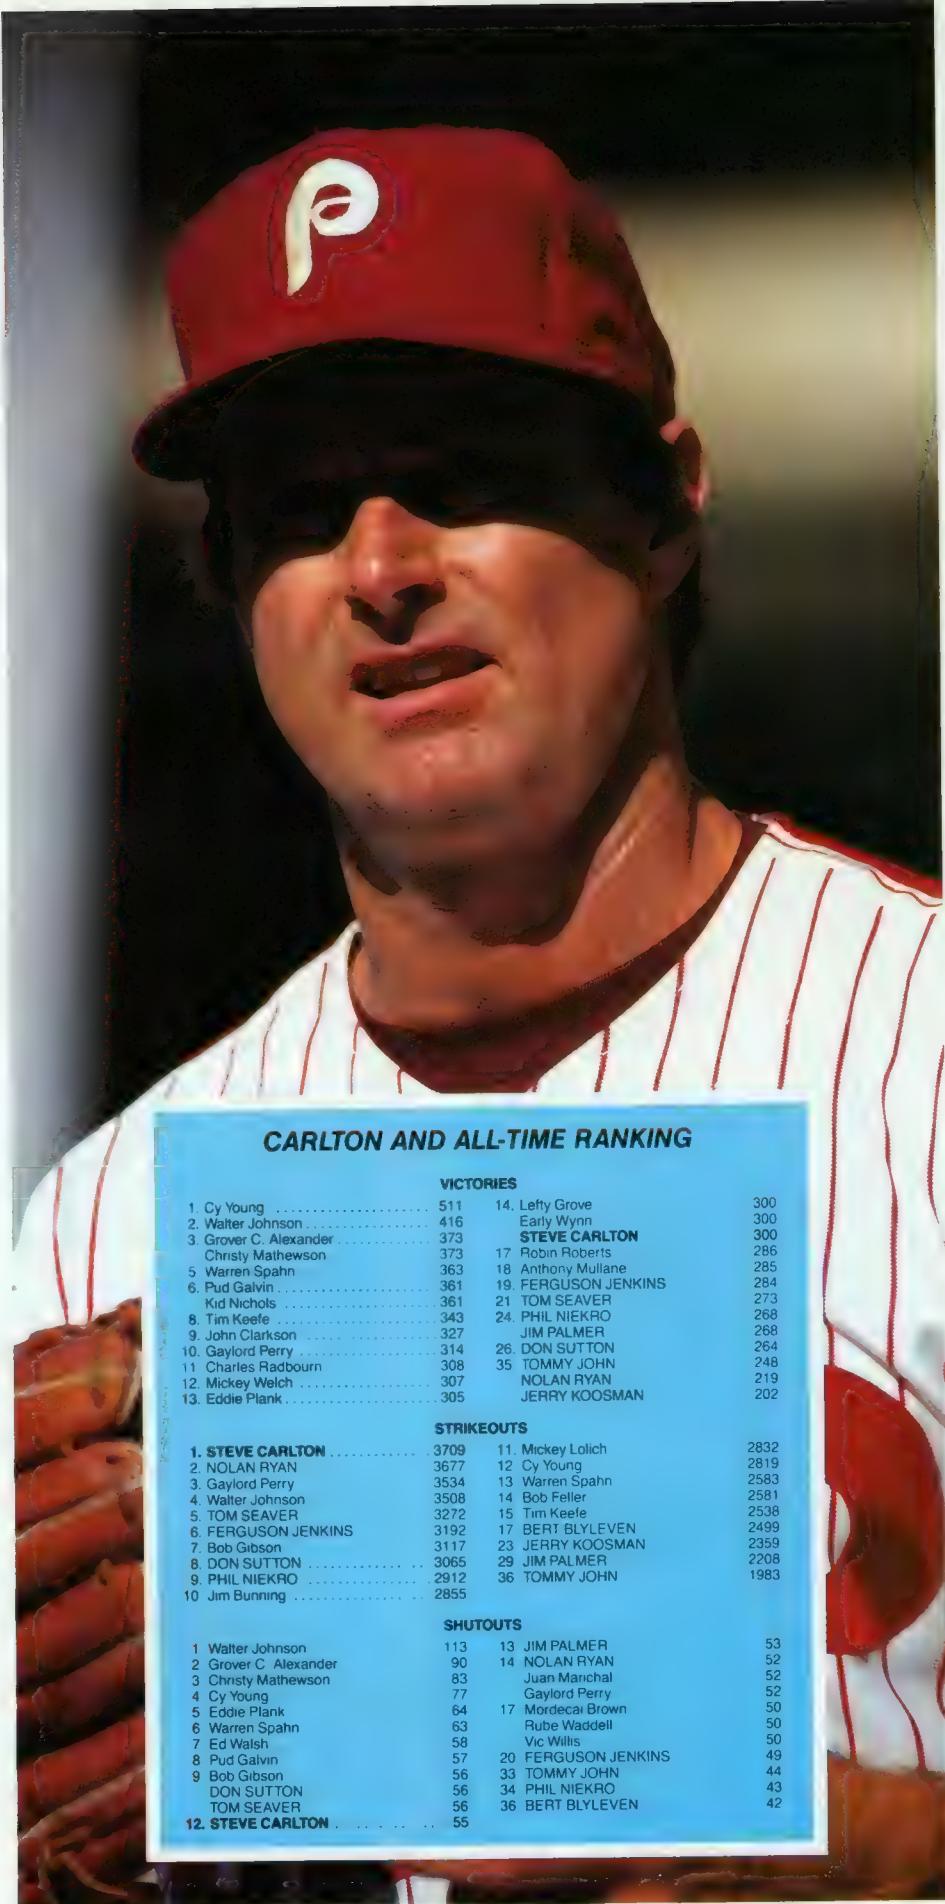

Only thirteen pitchers have recorded more wins than Steve Carlton, and with fifteen wins this season he would move into tenth place on the all-time list.

No man in the history of the game has struck out more batters than Lefty. He took the title away from Nolan Ryan last season just five weeks after Ryan dethroned Walter Johnson, who had held the mark for 62 years.

Carlton became the leader on June 7 and engaged in a battle with Ryan which would have made the inventors of leap frog proud. It was a classic contest, with the lead changing hands thirteen times. But eight weeks later, on July 28, Carlton became the all-time leader and never looked back.

As he embarks on his twentieth major league season, his thirteenth with the Phillies, Carlton continues to rewrite the baseball record books each time he takes the mound. And that is by no means an accident.

He approaches his craft like a skilled brain surgeon, constantly striving to improve on his technique. He is totally dedicated to his profession and

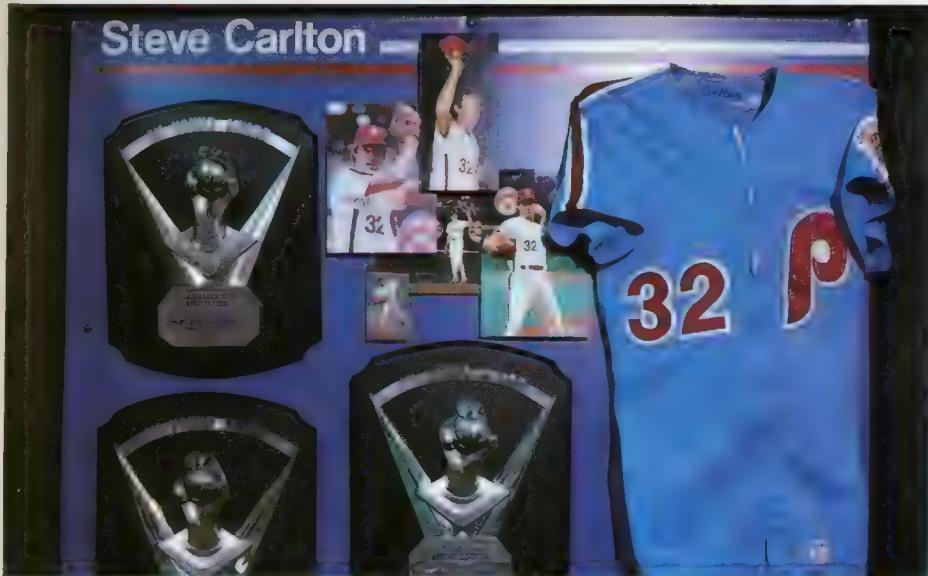

As a memento of his historic 300th win, Phillies organization gave Lefty a diamond ring.

Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, NY., has a special display on Steve, his four Cy Young Awards and the jersey he wore when he beat St. Louis last September for his 300th victory.

channels all of his resources into perfecting the art of pitching. And that is what has made him the greatest pitcher in the major leagues today—and quite possibly the greatest ever.

Gus Hoefling, the Phillies conditioning expert, has worked with Carlton since 1978 and probably understands him better than anyone. After a rare rainout during spring training this year, Hoefling talked openly about his feelings towards Carlton.

"Lefty is a unique individual," he said. "There is no one like him. He is a very very hard working individual and has an appetite for hard work I've never seen before. And he loves competition, he thrives on it," continued Hoefling.

Carlton is totally dedicated to Hoefling's conditioning program having participated in the daily ritual every day for the past seven years. He undergoes the grueling work-out for approximately two hours each day and sometimes as much as four hours on a given day, and that is without a break.

Most men couldn't go through what he goes through. Wouldn't go through it even if they could. But Lefty is a remarkable person who is in phenomenal physical condition. He has the body of a 22-year old man although his birth certificate shows that he is actually 39 years of age.

One key byproduct of his intense conditioning is that he has remained injury-free throughout his career. In fact, in twelve seasons with the Phillies he has missed only five out of 611 scheduled starting assignments.

Another key element to his success is the remarkable concentration he has on the mound. He allows nothing to distract him, he just shuts everything out.

Some say he even shuts out the hitters. That he just pitches to the strike zone and it makes no difference whether the batter is a .300 slugger or a .100 hitter. In Lefty's mind, it doesn't matter what hitter is batting if he makes the pitches he wants to make.

He is mentally conditioned as much as he is physically. Pitching coach Claude Osteen calls it total preparation. "He knows exactly what to do to prepare himself and only he knows when he is ready," said Osteen. "He leaves nothing to chance. It is intense concentration and preparation for each and every start and when he walks into the clubhouse on a day he is pitching he has just one thing on his mind—and that is winning," Osteen concluded.

While most men his age who have played the game have now retired to the broadcast booth or the peanut farm, Carlton continues to ring up hitters and rack up wins at a faster pace than he did earlier in his career.

How much longer he can continue to pitch with the level of consistency he has established is unknown. But Lefty may still be pitching while men half his age have vanished into obscurity.

How many more years can he pitch? And how many more games can he win? And how many more batters can he strike out? Nobody knows the answers to those questions, but don't be shocked by the staggering possibilities.

Don't be surprised if he pitches for another ten seasons. Carlton certainly believes it is possible as do several others, including Hoefling.

And don't be surprised if he wins another 100 games, or more. Consider the fact that he has won 91 games over the last five years and remember that one of those seasons was shorted by a third and Lefty missed 14 chances to start. Sixty-four more victories will make him the winningest left-handed pitcher in history. And 75 more would move him into third place all-time behind Cy Young (511) and Walter Johnson (416).

And don't be surprised if his strike out total zooms past 5000. He needs 291 to reach 4000, a mark within reach this season. Considering that he has averaged well over two hundred K's a season during his career, it should not take too long to reach 5000 and 6000 may not even be unrealistic.

One thing is for sure and that is this man will someday be given his spot among the immortals in baseball's Hall Of Fame. The only problem is they may have to enshrine him while he is still active because he may go on pitching forever.

Steve Carlton, a man of strong mind and strong body, was best described by a little verse in a graduation card:

"To achieve all that is possible,
We must attempt the impossible—

To be as much as we can be,
we must dream of being more."

Karen Ravn

Some kids are outstanding baseball players as Little Leaguers. Most show promise when they are in high school or American Legion ball. Mike Schmidt didn't start getting attention as a prospect until he was a shortstop at Ohio University.

Mike's athletic career nearly didn't make it to college.

First, as a six-year old, he fell out of a tree. While slipping, he grabbed onto uninsulated wires carrying 4,000 volts. Fortunately he was wearing sneakers. The juice went right through him into the ground. Aside from burn scars, Mike survived quite well and was back in school the next day.

Second, as a sophomore at Fairview High in Dayton, O., he was a quarterback and punt returner. Returning his first punt, Mike got nailed, twisted his right knee and was out for the rest of football season.

Third, next year, his other knee got banged up again playing football.

Fourth, with two bad knees Schmidt headed for Ohio U. to study architecture and maybe play basketball. "My freshman year in basketball, the trainer, team doctor and an insurance man met and told me I'd have to drop off the team. I was too much of a risk," Schmidt recalls.

Told to gain some strength in each leg, Mike began physical therapy. "I had some thoughts about hanging it up." Two months later he was out on the baseball field. Later as a Junior, he was an All-American shortstop.

The Phillies made him their number two pick in the June 1971 draft behind a big gangly hard-throwing right-handed pitcher by the name of Roy Thomas. He never made it with the Phillies but has been able to bounce around a bit in the majors.

Needless to say, Schmidt made it.

But, again, it almost wasn't to be.

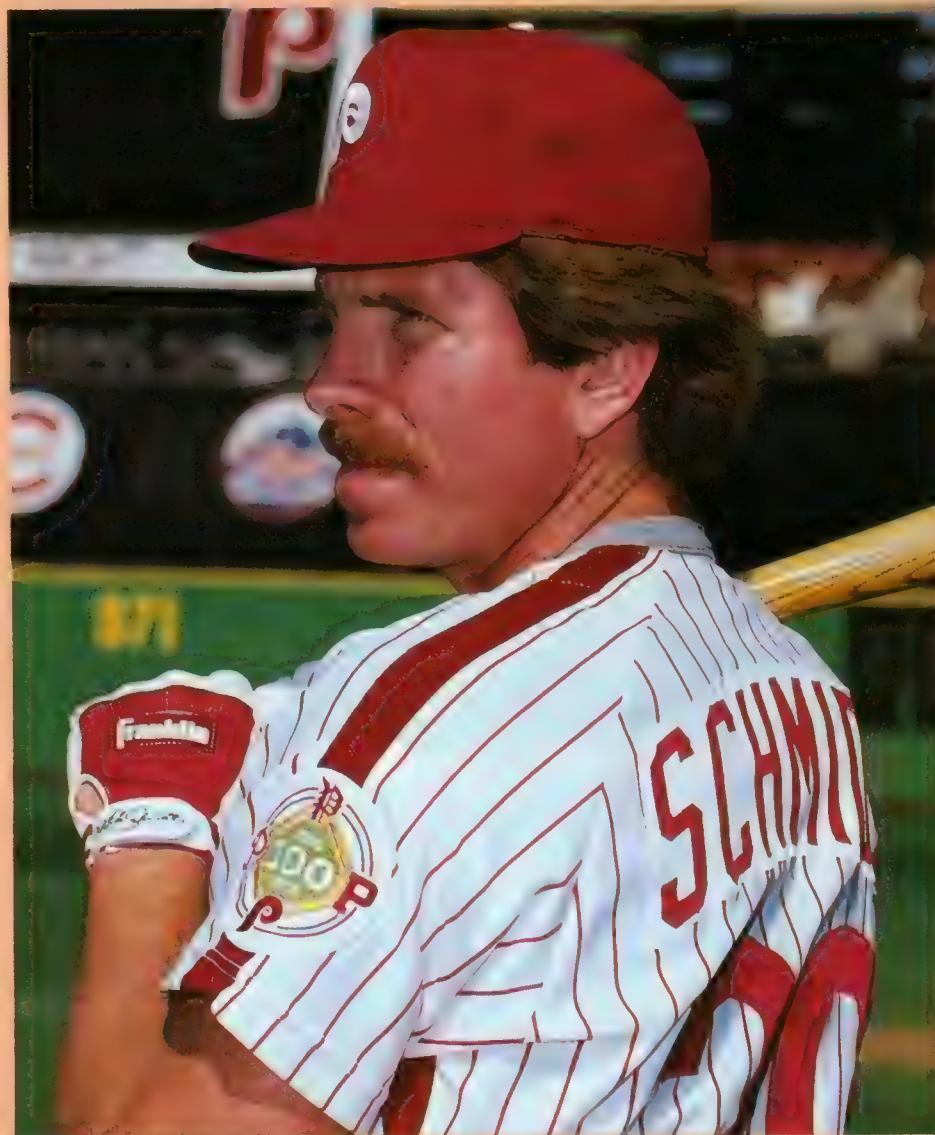

Tony Lucadello, one of the most successful of the Phillies scouts, had been following Schmidt for some time.

"The first time I saw Mike he was a sophomore in high school. He was a good athlete but he was a little heavy. He had baby fat, you might call it," Lucadello remembers.

"He played hard. He didn't like to lose. We call those kids 'follows.' He had trouble hitting anything off-speed, breaking stuff. But he'd battle for anything. He'd battle over a called strike. . . . He was always out there before the game, always one of the first guys out there. He loved the game."

In submitting his reports to Paul Owens, then the Director of Minor Leagues and Scouting, Lucadello listed Ohio State outfielder Bill Sharp and Schmidt as the top two prospects in his area. "Mike was a switch-hitter, a good one. And, he was a good shortstop. I tried to low-key my interest in him so that other scouts wouldn't get too excited about him. Sharp was a good prospect, but Schmidt was my No. 1," replies Lucadello, who has signed 49 major league players in his 42 years of scouting.

Owens flew to Ohio to spend a week with Lucadello to "see his best 6-7 players."

"Sharp was a short, stockily built left-handed hitter," says Owens. "I saw him earlier in the week. Then, we went to see Mike in a double-header against Bowling Green. It was raining and I thought I wouldn't get to see him play. Fortunately, they were able to get in both games.

"He hit a homer and got two or three other hits. He was a shortstop but to me he was going to make an ideal third baseman some day. From my viewpoint, there was no comparison between Mike and Sharp. Tony was right that Mike was his best prospect," added Owens.

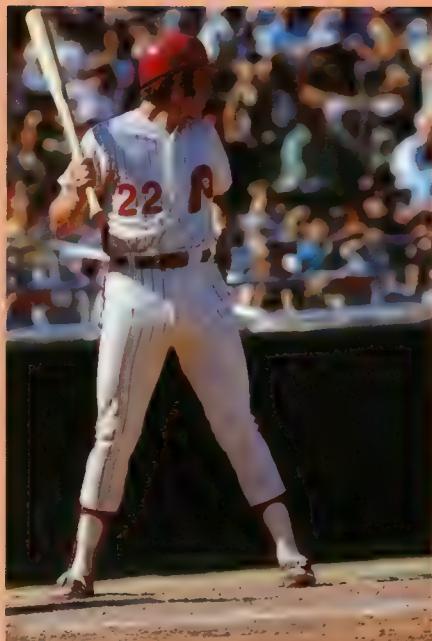

Owens moved Schmidt up from "fifth or sixth on my list to number two." Thomas still was the top prospect, in Owens' opinion.

Draft day was June 8, 1971. The Chicago White Sox, with the poorest record the year before, had first pick. The Phillies were sixth. Chicago took catcher Danny Goodwin. "I thought we had a good chance of getting Thomas on the first round but was holding my breath that Mike would be there on the second round," Owens added.

Thomas was there and grabbed by Owens. Now, it was round two. Chicago started off by taking Sharp. He was the 25th player to be drafted that day. Kansas City was 29th and they took another shortstop, a guy named George Brett. Owens was 30th and relieved. Without hesitation he announced "Mike Schmidt."

From Ohio U. to Reading (Eastern League). Then Eugene, Ore., (Pacific Coast League) in Schmidt's first full season as a pro, 1972. He came up to the Phillies that September (wore No. 22) and got his first major league home run off Montreal left-hander Balor Moore.

Spring training 1973 in Clearwater saw a battle for third base. Don Money and John Vukovich, who had played third, were both traded after the previous season. Schmidt's competition came from Cesar Tovar, Jose Pagan, Alan Bannister and Terry Harmon. Only a late spring training injury kept Mike from opening the season at third.

Ray Kelly, the veteran baseball writer for the old Evening Bulletin, wrote: "There's no doubt about it, the youngster from Dayton has talent. He has the body of a linebacker and lightning wrists that make a big swing something he doesn't need."

Ellis Clancy, a Minnesota Twins scout, said in Clearwater after one game: "Schmidt is going to be the premier home run hitter in the game very soon."

That bold statement didn't get off the ground when Schmidt hit .196 as a rookie. He did, however, homer 18 times in just 367 at bats.

Then came 1974 and Clancy was right as Schmidt led the majors for the first time.

A baseball career that almost wasn't has turned out to be a Hall of Fame career.

As the home runs mount, Schmidt continues to move into heavy territory. He's already the Phillies greatest home run hitter. Being the outright leader of the majors six times, only Babe Ruth (nine times) has done better.

Only Eddie Mathews, a Hall of Famer, has more home runs among all the third basemen who have played this great game. Mathews hit 478 at that position, a mark within Mike's reach.

No. 1 home run hitter in the majors the last five years and 10 years is Michael Jack Schmidt.

Last season, he passed 13 players, including the likes of Yogi Berra, Joe DiMaggio and Ralph Kiner on baseball's all-time list. He will become only the 20th player to reach 400 when he hits his 11th this year.

Should he hit 38 homers this season, he'll have jumped over Johnny Bench, Al Kaline, Duke Snider and Billy Williams.

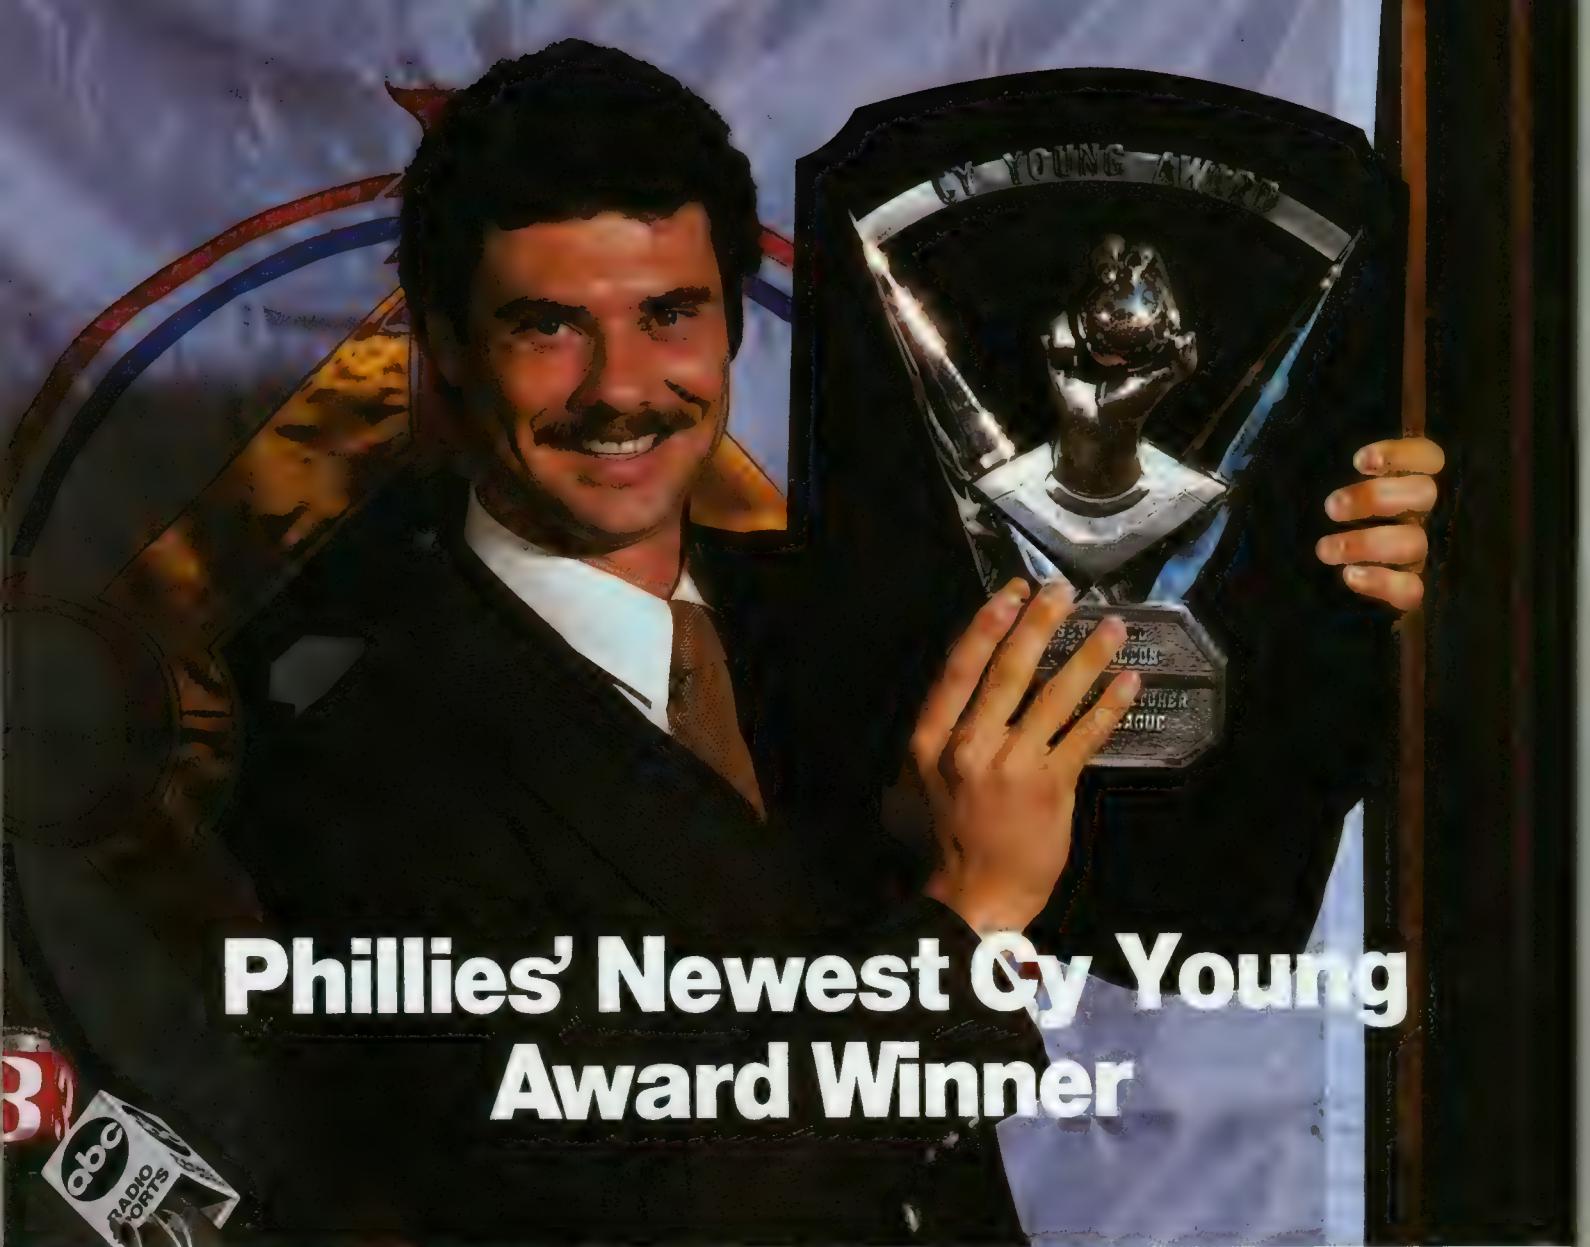

Will he get to 500? Don't bet against it.

KILLEBREW

KINGMAN

Phillies' Newest Cy Young Award Winner

John Denny followed Steve Carlton as back-to-back Cy Young Award winners.

Every morning around seven o'clock at the Phillies spring training complex in Clearwater, Florida, a handful of pitchers begin the day with a grueling workout administered by conditioning expert Gus Hoefling.

The Phillies fitness guru helped inspire his pupils with verbal encouragement, telling them "Let's go now, guys. You never know which one of you might be a Cy Young Award winner."

John Denny remembers that day well, but at the time those encouraging words went in one ear and out the other. "I really thought if any of us was going to win it, it was going to be Lefty (teammate Steve Carlton) again," he said, recalling that February morning of a year ago.

Denny had good reason to feel that way, after all he was coming off a season in which he compiled a 6-13 record, 4.87 ERA and missed 45 days with shoulder ailments.

But it was the right-hander Denny who was named the National League's Cy Young Award winner last year, not the left-hander who has dominated the Phillies pitching staff for the past decade.

There was little suspense as Denny was the obvious choice. The only question in waiting for the November announcement was how big his margin of victory would be. Unlike the typical close games he pitched all season, Denny's selection was a runaway. He outdistanced Cincinnati's Mario Soto, 103 points to 61, receiving 20 of 24 first place votes.

Denny had an outstanding season for the Phillies, winning 19 of 25 decisions and could easily have won an additional eight games had it not been for the lack of offense from the club early in the season.

The Phillies were 27-9 in the games Denny started and scored a total of only seven runs in his six losses. His league-leading .760 winning percentage is second best in the club's history. Hall of Famer Robin Roberts had an .800 percentage (28-7) in 1952.

Denny was the league's top winner, 19-6, and his low 2.37 ERA ranked second to San Francisco's Atlee Hammaker's 2.25 mark. He consistently outmatched his opponents, allowing two earned runs or less in 24 of his 36 starts.

After the All-Star break he was simply awesome, winning 13 of 14 decisions. He was named National League Pitcher of the Month in September having compiled a 6-0 record and a 1.90 ERA.

Without his stellar performance down the stretch and all season long, it is safe to say that the Phillies would not have had such a successful season.

It was the best season of Denny's career and at age 31, his future looks very promising. He set career highs in wins, games pitched, starts, innings pitched and strikeouts along with a career low 2.37 ERA. That topped his league leading 2.52 mark he established in 1976.

His tremendous turnaround earned him Comeback Player of the Year honors in the National League from both The Sporting News and United Press International.

Denny's strong commitment to Christianity has helped turn his life around. Through his faith he finds it easier to accept life's trials and tribulations. According to Denny, "The stability has allowed me to open my mind. I don't have trouble coping as a ballplayer anymore."

Carlton, Hoefling and pitching coach Claude Osteen are also given credit for contributing to his success. "I learned how to rethink the game from Lefty," says Denny. "I learned not to let negative things bother me."

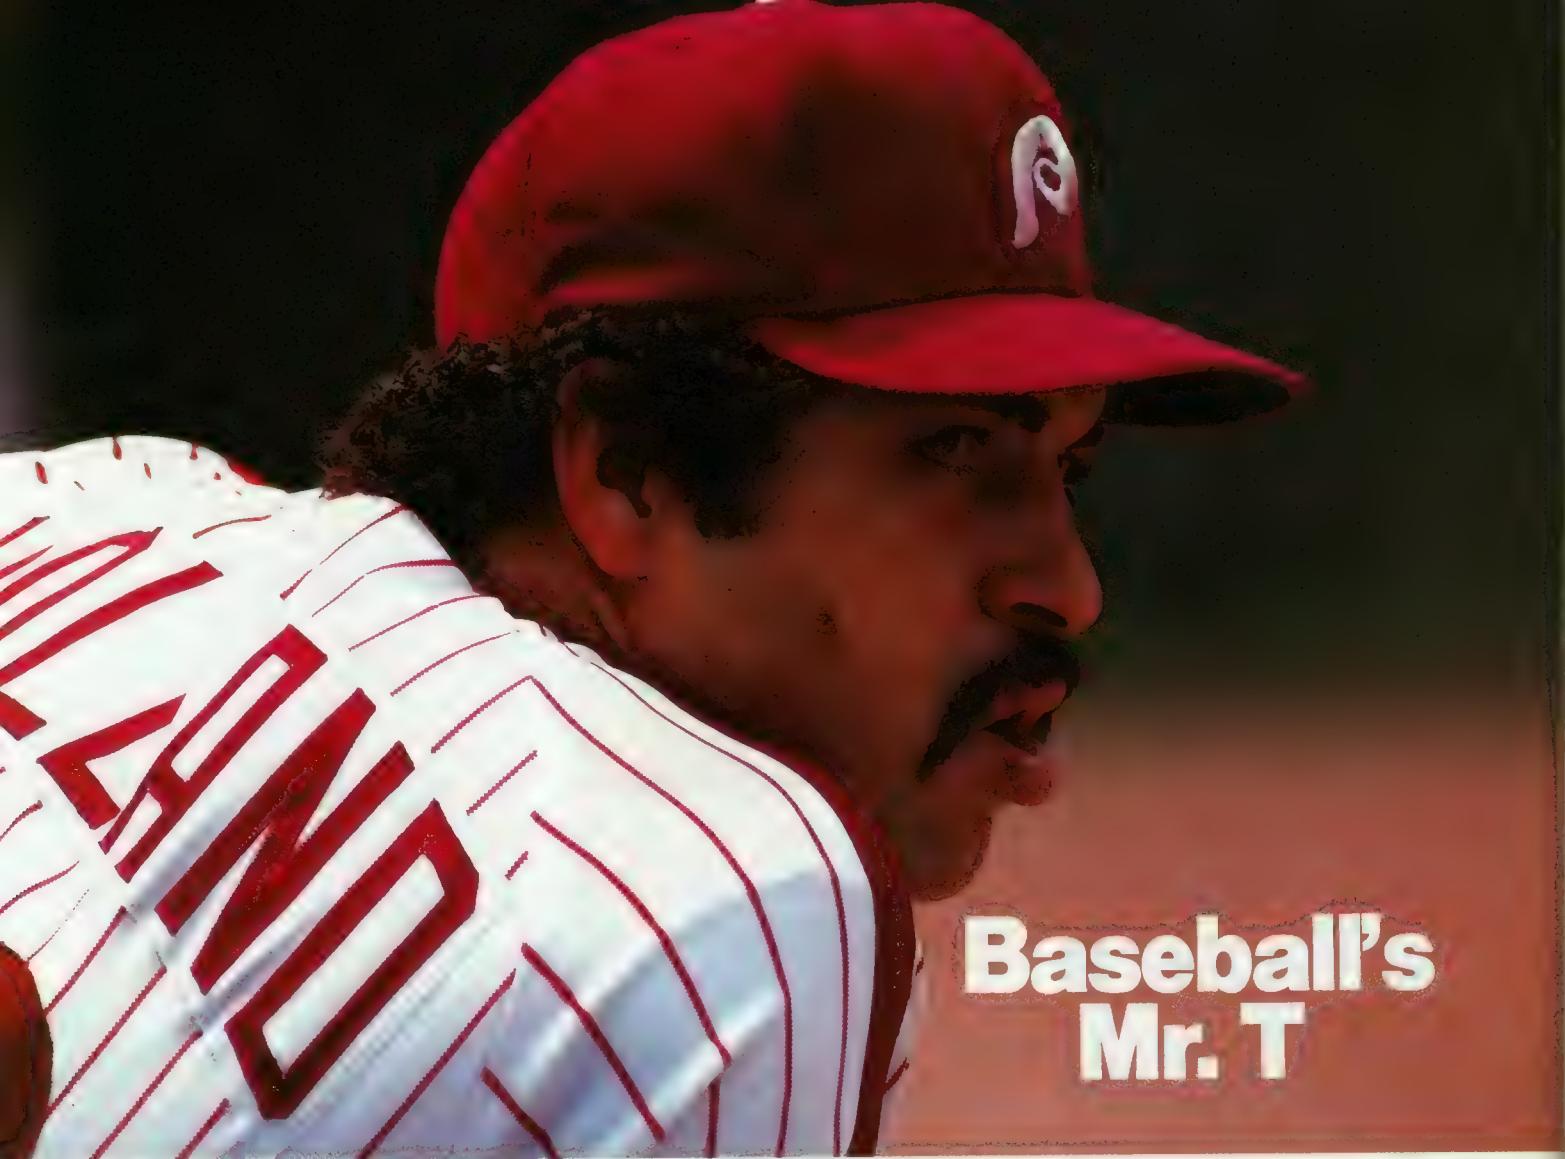

It was actually Carlton who got Denny started on Hoefling's strenuous conditioning program. The two hurlers are neighbors in the off-season, residing in Chesterfield, Missouri and Carlton got Denny interested in the program shortly after coming to the Phillies in September, 1982 in a trade with Cleveland.

Now Denny works with Hoefling every day of the week during the season, except on the days he pitches. He claims that pitching a ballgame is much easier than his strenuous daily workout and regards pitching as more of an off-day.

Osteen, who was Denny's pitching coach with the Cardinals for three years, noticed and helped correct a flaw in his delivery. How does Osteen feel about Denny's remarkable turnaround? "I don't think I've ever seen anything quite like it," he said.

"Last season wasn't a fluke, I think he can progress even further. He's come so far, I don't know if he's grasped it yet. Maybe the Cy Young Award will make him realize just how good he is, and how much better he can become."

Looking back on Denny's 1983 season, you have to wonder just how much better he can be.

Baseball's Mr. T

How does Paul Owens spell relief. . . . A-L H-O-L-L-A-N-D.

There's nothing magical about Al Holland and his approach to pitching. There are no trick pitches such as a screwball, slip pitch, palm ball, split-fingered fast ball. Just plain old "No. 1", "heat", "smoke" as it is called in baseball lingo.

Once Owens phones bullpen coach Mike Ryan he wants Holland, the game plan becomes easy—go at 'em with your best stuff. Holland swaggered in from the bullpen, paws at the mound while Owens delivers a message, scowls at hitters and then gets right to work.

He looks so mean and nasty on the mound he's become known as "Mr. T."

Al Holland has been, is and always will be that way . . . a no nonsense, let's-get-it-over-with competitive athlete.

"I played all four years (football at North Carolina A & T). I was a fullback, a tight end. I punted and kicked off. If I'm going to run the football, I don't trick anyone. I try to run over him. That's the way I pitch. I'm not a trick pitcher."

"It is a personal battle. It's a one-on-one confrontation with the batter. It's my job to get him out and his job to knock me out."

"When we come into the game, we don't have a lot of margin for error. We can't nick and pick. We've got to go right after them. That's why I just try and throw strikes. You know my theory on pitching—just aim for the middle, rare back and let it fly."

"I enjoy striking people out. It's the same feeling a guy gets when he hits a homer."

"I take it one step at a time. I play it simple but play it hard. The more outs I can get without my fielders handling the ball, the less chance there is of errors."

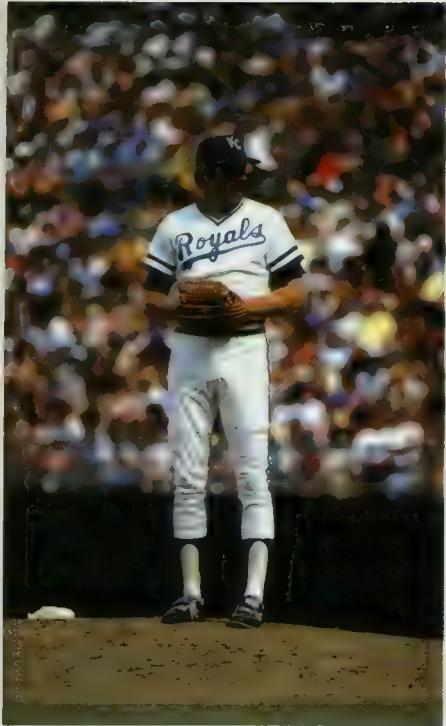

"None of it matters. What I did yesterday has nothing to do with what happens today. I show up knowing I've got to be ready."

"That's the one thing I like about baseball. You can go out and be the goat, maybe give up a homer that loses a game. You really feel bad and you come in the next day and redeem yourself."

"Most relievers, their elevators don't go to the top, anyway. Most relievers are crazy. They have to be. Who in their right mind would want to walk out in front of thousands of people with a game, maybe a pennant on the line—and enjoy every minute of it."

"The pressure is not on me. It's a lot of fun to go out in a pressure situation and just air it all out."

That's Al Holland. Come to the park, be ready, get a chance, go at them, win or lose, be back tomorrow for the same challenge.

After the 1982 season, the Phillies went shopping for a stopper. A five-player trade with San Francisco brought Holland east. He delivered and how.

Holland became the first Phillies pitcher to win the coveted Rolaids Relief Man Award in the National League. It marked the first time the NL award was won by someone other than Rollie Fingers or Bruce Sutter since the award's first year, 1976, when Rawly Eastwick won the title.

The Phillies ace lefty compiled 62 points (See "Scoring" chart) to beat out Lee Smith of the Chicago Cubs.

With Holland leading the way, the Phillies bullpen also walked off with its first Team Award. The Phillies relievers compiled 132 points to nose out Houston's staff by two.

Along with his big trophy, Al received a beautiful diamond ring from Rolaids.

Rolaids Relief Man Award

The Rolaids Relief Man Award competition, now in its ninth season, was begun by Major League Baseball and Warner Lambert, Inc., in 1976.

The program recognizes the individual top reliever in both leagues, the top relief pitcher on each of the 26 clubs and the best team bullpen on the basis of a specially created point system.

Both league winners, plus individual club winners, receive silver fireman's cap trophies to commemorate their championship.

SCORING

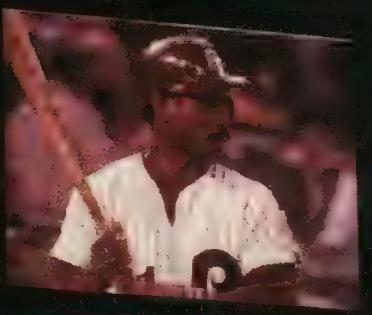

The Rolaids Relief Man Award relies upon a unique scoring system, which has proven to be the most accurate way of rating relief pitchers, to determine the league winners:

- Two points are credited to a relief pitcher for each win
- Two points are credited for each save
- One point is deducted for each loss

In case of ties, the relief pitcher with the lowest earned run average will be the winner.

SAVE DEFINITION

As defined by the Baseball Writer's Association of America, a save shall be credited when a relief pitcher meets all three of the following conditions: (1) he is the finishing pitcher in a game won by his club, (2) he is not the winning pitcher, (3) he qualifies under one of the following conditions: (a) he enters the game with a lead of no more than three runs and pitches for at least one inning, (b) he enters the game with the potential tying run either on base, at bat, or on deck (i.e. the potential tying run either already on base or is one of the first two batters he faces), (c) he pitches effectively for at least three innings regardless of the score.

Marlboro

Games, gags, fun and excitement are in store for the whole family as the exciting entertainment tradition continues with the Phillies at Veterans Stadium.

Phanavision is in its first full season bringing an added dimension to Phillies baseball. Three cameras and a seven person crew command 68,400 red, green and blue light bulbs arranged in 22,800 little triangles to put you on the inside track, up-close at every home game.

A new season long series of player profiles examining career stats and playing history designed to acquaint you with the new faces on the field will join the much proclaimed line-up of games and quizzes and candid fan reactions.

A not so new, fury green character—Phillie Phanatic—continues to delight and entertain.

Beginning his seventh season, the Phanatic will poke fun, joke and frolic his way into your heart, up to his same old tricks and a bag full of new gags and surprises.

Cheers, laughs, fireworks, fun-filled promotions fill the line-up card for the 1984 Phillies baseball season.

Veterans Stadium and Phillies baseball . . . the area's most complete family entertainment package.

On The Air

Millions of fans hear them on broadcasts and telecasts. Many fans are more familiar with their names than many of the major league players.

"They" are the veteran Phillies broadcasting team of Harry Kalas, Richie Ashburn, Andy Musser and Chris Wheeler. In a day and age of constant changes in the broadcasting industry, the Phillies foursome have been together since 1977. That's unheard of and certainly attests to their quality work.

Ashburn, one of Philadelphia's most popular sports figures, is in his 22nd year behind the microphone. Kalas is in year number 14, Musser, his eighth and Wheeler, his seventh.

This year's format has Kalas-Ashburn-Musser on WTAF, Channel 29 while Musser and Wheeler will handle the Prism TV games. All four will be heard on WCAU AM (1210).

Radio
WCAU AM (1210) will again carry every game during the regular season.

A very extensive programming of baseball will be heard on the station this season.

Bill Campbell will start each day's broadcasting programming with Major League Baseball Today, followed by Ashburn and Kalas on Phillies Warm-Up.

Following the games, Ashburn, Kalas or Musser will anchor the Star Of The Game Show and Campbell ends with Phillies Wrap-Up.

"The Paul Owens Show", a two-way talk show, is on WCAU every Thursday (6-7 p.m.) through October 11. Co-hosting the show is WCAU Sports Director Steve Fredericks.

Television

The Phillies log for this season includes 114 scheduled games, from spring training right through to the final game of the season. (Check the season schedule for the television dates).

WTAF will carry 81 regular season games and Prism will have 30 home games. Ray Tipton will be the Producer for the second straight year for Channel 29. Pre and post-game shows on Channel 29 will be hosted by Don Henderson.

Fans will also get to see the Phillies when they are on national television. There are no more blackouts for national telecasts by ABC or NBC under major league baseball's new television contract.
